Fall College Visits Help High School Seniors Make Final Decisions

ATLANTA, October 11, 2011—Go See Campus (<http://goseecampus.com>), the free website for planning college visits, is helping high school seniors and parents prepare for trips to college campuses this fall with new online resources.

Many colleges set admissions deadlines between December and February, and admissions programs such as Early Action and Early Decision require student applications even sooner. As a result, students in their final year of high school will traditionally make college visits from September to mid-December.

Visiting during the fall provides several benefits to high school seniors. Knowing more about the college can help the student decide if the school is the right match, and college visits provide a chance to experience the campus, academic programs, and student life.

In addition, students may be able to tailor their applications better to a college if they have first-hand knowledge of the school. Kiersten Murphy of Murphy College Consultants in Seattle, Wash. recommends these fall college visits. She says, "Visiting campus makes it easier to answer that question that always comes up on college applications: 'Why do you think you are a match for this school?' A student who has visited the college has a better answer for that."

Parents in particular appreciate fall college visits because the trips help parents have a dialogue with their children about the college search, according to Go See Campus Founder Kevin Preis. He adds, "Go See Campus provides families with free tools that let them focus on the college visit experience instead of dealing with the challenges of college trip planning."

Go See Campus, launched in March 2010, helps high school students and parents by providing them with a first-of-its-kind, online College Trip Planner. Students can search for colleges, connect to activities like campus tours, and create itineraries to take on the road.

In addition to offering the College Trip Planner, Go See Campus recently expanded its "Resource Library" on Facebook, which offers exclusive information not yet available in the website's "College Advice" section. New articles about college visits include "Travel Advice for a Great Road Trip," "How to Connect with College Students When You Visit Campus," and "Meet with a Coach on a Campus Visit." Like the College Trip Planner, students and parents can access this content for free.

About Go See Campus

Go See Campus is the free website that helps students and parents plan campus visits online and make the most of the college search.
